Notice of discovery at Lascoursonnie of bronze ax heads from the second Bronze Age. Twenty five ax heads were found in the same field where two years before 2 bronze ax heads, a bronze vase, and a bronze ring were found. The objects are likely a foundry deposit because of casting burrs still on them. Although the society wanted to acquire the objects for the museum, the proprietor wanted too much money for them. However, a 1990 article by Chevillot notes that this site was misidentified in the meeting as Fanlac and should be Thonac (see dépôt des Serres).
